

Following the recession of the 1980's there was a movement to make UK companies more lean and more focused on productivity. It was envisioned that future organisations would be a mixture of permanent, temporary and outsourced resources. This is essentially the organisation of today. Most businesses need a stable core team and then they can seek out the right talent for short term requirements, where capability within the organisation is lacking.

Planning for the use of temporary resource, if managed correctly, can significantly reduce cost in the long term. This is particularly the case when businesses are moving towards the end of the fiscal year. Working with finance contractors, for example, is hugely beneficial for businesses. They are adept at assimilating into new environments and driving change, turning projects around and communicating with key stakeholders without fear of raising sensitive issues. By hiring a finance contractor to assist you with year-end accounts, you are guaranteeing a Flexible, Highly Skilled and Cost Effective resource.

Nigel Wright can assist you with the identification of contractors as well as permanent staff.
