

The public and third sectors have and continue to go through a period of significant change and consequently this hugely dynamic environment increasingly requires strong leaders who can deliver a variety of complex projects. In fact, many of the skills and attributes historically associated with the commercial sector are now equally important within public bodies. The phrase 'commercial awareness with a social conscience' is often used to describe those candidates who are best aligned to the sector. We continue to see an increased flow of talent between the private and public sectors, which expands the available talent pool to the benefit of both sectors.

Nigel Wright has worked closely with public and third sector organisations for many years and can offer recruitment solutions at all levels, from junior through to middle management as well as board appointments, across multiple discipline areas. Our success is based on our ability to intimately understand the challenges facing this sector, and providing a tailored solution to address our customers' specific requirements.
